EXPERIENCE

Lydia Parnes retired as a partner from Wilson Sonsini Goodrich & Rosati in 2024. While at the firm, she served as co-leader of Wilson Sonsini's privacy and cybersecurity practice. She regularly represented companies in complex regulatory investigations and provides advice on complying with federal, state, and global privacy and data protection laws.

The former director of the Bureau of Consumer Protection (BCP) at the Federal Trade Commission (FTC), Lydia is a highly regarded privacy expert. As director of the BCP, Lydia oversaw privacy and data security enforcement efforts and the development of the FTC's approach to online advertising.

She testified on numerous occasions on the benefits of a uniform nationwide data breach law and the risks of legislating in the technology area.

During her time at Wilson Sonsini, Lydia advised companies on how to navigate global privacy and data security requirements while pursuing their business goals. She helped them develop and implement comprehensive privacy compliance programs and understand the nuances of regulation and self-regulation in the privacy arena. Lydia regularly represented clients before the FTC and other federal and state agencies.

Lydia was named a top lawyer in the cybersecurity category by Washingtonian Magazine in 2018, 2017, and 2015, and was regularly recognized among the country's top privacy and data security attorneys in Chambers USA, Chambers Global, and The International Who's Who of Business Lawyers.

Lydia was a frequent speaker on developments in data security and privacy at events throughout the country.
