EXPERIENCE

Mark Bellomy is a partner in Wilson Sonsini Goodrich & Rosati's Boston office, where he is a member of the technology transactions practice. Mark advises numerous domestic and international public and private biopharmaceutical, medtech, digital health, medical device, and life sciences companies on all of the transactions related to the discovery, development, supply, and commercialization of their products, technologies, and services. He counsels clients with respect to structuring and negotiating a wide range of arrangements designed to maximize the value of their businesses.

Mark specializes in working with his clients on the most complex strategic alliances and collaborations for the development and marketing of all stages of pharmaceutical and other products. In addition, he helps companies with a broad range of other transactions, including technology and asset acquisition, license, discovery, research, development (including clinical development), manufacture and supply, promotion, marketing, distribution, and services agreements. In 2022, Mark was recognized as a "Life Science Star" in the intellectual property section of LMG Life Sciences.

Prior to joining the firm, Mark was an IP transactions partner in the Boston office of Ropes & Gray. Earlier in his career, he was also senior licensing counsel for Wyeth Pharmaceuticals. Before attending law school, Mark served as a cavalry officer and scout platoon leader in the United States Army.
