EXPERIENCE

Andrea Linna is a partner at Wilson Sonsini Goodrich & Rosati, where she is member of the firm's digital health industry group and its healthcare practice. With more than a decade dedicated to healthcare law, Andrea exclusively represents digital health and healthcare IT clients, from emerging companies to established industry players, investors, and healthcare systems. Andrea guides her clients through the patchwork of federal and state laws that apply to digital health companies, addressing issues such as corporate practice of medicine, Stark Law compliance, Anti-Kickback Statute considerations, fee splitting, billing Medicare and Medicaid, contracting with commercial payors, value-based care arrangements, artificial intelligence, remote patient monitoring, online prescribing, scope of practice, and licensing requirements.

Prior to joining the firm, Andrea was a partner at McGuireWoods in Chicago and served as co-leader of its digital health, technology and innovation practice. Before that, she was a partner at Honigman LLP.

Andrea frequently speaks and writes about emerging healthcare and technology topics. She has been quoted by CNBC and Crain's and has given guest lectures on healthcare law at Northwestern University's Feinberg School of Medicine and Pritzker School of Law, the University of Michigan School of Public Health, Loyola University School of Law, and The Wharton School of the University of Pennsylvania.

Beyond her professional pursuits, Andrea serves on the Women United Council for the United Way of Metro Chicago, the Executive Leadership Council for the Chicago Alzheimer's Association, and Springboard Enterprises' Women's Health Innovation Council.

Andrea is practicing virtually in Chicago. She is licensed in Illinois, Michigan, and Ohio.
